ANN ARBOR AREA

Ann Arbor has an abundance of wonderful neighborhoods to explore.
This is only a small sample of the great communities in the Ann Arbor Area.

Burns Park

Blocks of tree-canopied streets and beautiful old homes set around an historic park and school--as well as its location near both U of M's campus and downtown--make Burns Park one of the city's most desirable neighborhoods.

Barton Hills

Located within Ann Arbor Charter Township and adjacent to the city of Ann Arbor, the community was originally named "Huron Farms" and was established by the Detroit Edison Company in 1913. This upscale, pristine community has homes that capture all the simple sophistication that this historical Michigan town has to offer. The green hills of Ann Arbor provide a peaceful view for the residents of this luxurious community.

Old West Side

The Old West Side is an historic neighborhood whose architecture, streetscape, history, and environment are especially characteristic of 19th century midwestern America. The homes actually vary in styles and include mansard, Queen Anne, Romanesque villas, Colonial, Georgian revival, Gothic cottages and Italian bracket. There are a few new homes, but most structures were built between 1850 and 1925.

Water Hill

Established early 1900s, this beautiful neighborhood is an eclectic mix of architectural styles. A combination of retired and young families live among lofty hills in houses ranging from Cape Cods to Colonials. They're not far from downtown and have easy access to both Bird Hills Nature Area and Bluffs Park. The city calls this Sunset neighborhood, but a spectacularly successful neighborhood music festival has popularized a new name: Water Hill.

Kerrytown District is a unique blend of neighborhood and business. This is an historic area of downtown Ann Arbor that offers you one-of-a-kind shops, restaurants, markets, delis, concert house, art gallery, Farmers' and Artisan's Market, children's museum, and a rich and diverse culture. An eclectic mix of homes fills the Northside Elementary area northeast of downtown, where a community center draws neighbors to its steps and baseball players to Northside Park's fields. Long known as Lower Town, this portal to the northeast side has some of the city's oldest surviving houses.

Geddes/Arboretum Area

Bordering on the thousand-acre Nichols Arboretum, this neighborhood is on a wooded natural area sloping down to the Huron River, with stately mansions and large, secluded homes. East of the Arb, the streets north of Geddes are lined with large, stately older homes built in the 1920s and 1930s. Perched on the slopes overlooking the river are newer custom-built houses, many in mid-century modern style.

This Westside Ann Arbor neighborhood is comprised of historic homes constructed between the 1930s and 1950s. The area is nestled around the Maryfield Wildwood Park.

Many homes have been updated with modern decor and conveniences while retaining some of the original features. Lansdowne Park is located within the neighborhood.

Dicken

Dicken is a west side family neighborhood with shady streets and modest 1- and 2-story homes. It includes Dicken Woods, a nature area behind the elementary school that was saved from development by neighbors and is now the site of school and community nature programs.

Polo Fields

The Polo Fields consists of three phases: The Fairways at The Polo Fields, The Preserves at The Polo Fields, and The Gallery at The Polo Fields. SALINE

REAL ESTATE ONE - SALINE

HISTORY

SALINE

Saline was founded as a village in 1832 and it wasn't long before it grew, both in population and size. It was an important stage-stop on the Chicago Road, and the town attracted a number of artisan workshops and mills. But it was actually the railroad that made the village grow. During the Civil War, so many young men were drawn into the ranks of the military that there was a serious labor shortage. This caused local investments in agricultural equipment to more than double during the 1860s.

By the end of the war, farmers were competing in the expanding commercial marketplace. A desire for a reliable and inexpensive means to transport large amounts of staple crops to market prompted 32 citizens to affix their names to a petition calling for money to be raised to invest in Detroit, Hillsdale, and Indiana Railroad stock. Between the farmers and the merchants, who also saw the possibility of advancing their own interests, the money was raised and sufficient stock was purchased so that the locals convinced the railroad to build a line between Ypsilanti and Hillsdale. It was opened for service on July 4, 1870.

As the turn of the century loomed on the horizon, an electric interurban trolley line operated between Detroit, Ann Arbor, and Jackson. Saline's car, known as Old Maude, made frequent trips on rails that ran parallel to Michigan Avenue, connecting with the main line at Ypsilanti. Old Maude made trips "into the city" possible and provided young people studying at the Ypsilanti Normal School with transportation between home and school. The trolley operated about 25 years and was powered by a transformer, whose tower building is long gone.

Development of both automobiles and the trucking industry reduced travel by train and trolley. Rail passenger service to Saline was discontinued in the late 1930s; freight service hung on until the early 1960s.

In spite of the beginnings of the depression, Saline continued to upgrade. The Old Union School was torn down in 1930 and a new Art Deco building was constructed on the same site and used the same name. The following year, the Village of Saline became the City of Saline. Becoming a city gave relief to voters who otherwise would need to travel on Election Day to polling places in several different townships.

The Saline area remained a farming community throughout the 20th century. There was little money to be seen during depression years, but the heavy blows of the times did not affect Saline as greatly as it affected people in the larger cities of our nation. Farmers had always been self-sufficient; there was always food for the table. Add that to the frugality of Germans and Englishmen and one could observe families who knew how to "make do" with what they had on hand.

With a population of just under 10,000 in 2005, Saline prides itself on community involvement. The schools, churches, district library, hospital, parks and recreation, arts, and museums offer something for everyone. Housing and employment opportunities draw new families to the area daily. Together with the surrounding townships, it is one busy community.

In the early 1990s, the land was purchased by a developer and this small subdivision of high end luxury homes was developed.

YPSILANTI

REAL ESTATE ONE - YPSILANTI

YPSILANTI

Established as a city in 1823 Michigan's second oldest city was named after General Demetrius Ypsilanti, a hero in the Greek war for independence. Judge Woodward of Detroit was so impressed and fascinated by General Ypsilanti's military successes that he named this settlement on the Huron River after the war hero.

Ypsilanti would eventually encompass several area settlements that were established to take advantage of both the Huron River and existing Indian trails. The most famous of which was the Sauk trail. In 1935 a military road following the path of the Sauk trail opened from Chicago to Detroit and the railroad followed three years later. Originally named Chicago Road, the byway would become Michigan Avenue providing a major source of industry and anchor Ypsilanti's downtown commercial district.

Today Michigan's second largest historic district is in Ypsilanti. Approximately 20 percent of the 4.4 square miles is designated historic. Instead of the flour, paper and lumber mills or the cigar makers and long underwear manufacturers housed in these 19th century buildings, you will find coffee shops and hip clothiers. You can shop for original art or relax next to the railroad tracks at a restaurant voted to have one of the top burgers in the country.
